"Contributors." Intermedia Games—Games Inter Media: Video Games and Intermediality. Ed. Michael Fuchs and Jeff Thoss. New York: Bloomsbury Academic, 2019. 271–276. Bloomsbury Collections. Web. 26 Apr. 2023. <<http://dx.doi.org/10.5040/9781501330520.0008>>.

Downloaded from Bloomsbury Collections, www.bloomsburycollections.com, 26 April 2023, 11:08 UTC.

Copyright © Michael Fuchs, Jeff Thoss and Contributors 2019. Released under a CC BY-NC-ND licence (<https://creativecommons.org/licenses/by-nc-nd/3.0/>). You may share this work for non-commercial purposes only, provided you give attribution to the copyright holder and the publisher, and provide a link to the Creative Commons licence.

Contributors

Marco Caracciolo is Associate Professor of English and Literary Theory at Ghent University in Belgium, where he leads the ERC Starting Grant project “Narrating the Mesh.” Marco’s work explores the phenomenology of narrative, or the structure of the experiences afforded by literary fiction and other narrative media. He is the author of three books: The Experientiality of Narrative: An Enactivist Approach (De Gruyter, 2014), Strange Narrators in Contemporary Fiction: Explorations in Readers’ Engagement with Characters (University of Nebraska Press, 2016), and A Passion for Specificity: Confronting Inner Experience in Literature and Science (co-authored with psychologist Russell Hurlburt; Ohio State University Press, 2016).

Marco de Mutiis is a curator and researcher focusing on contemporary transformations—mutations and remediations—of photographic practices, including the representation, distribution, and consumption of images. He is currently researching the phenomenon of in-game photography in the SNF (Swiss National Science Foundation)-funded project “Post-Photography.” At Fotomuseum Winterthur, he directs and co-curates the SITUATIONS program.

Christophe Duret is a PhD candidate in French Studies and Lecturer at the Université de Sherbrooke (Quebec, Canada). His research interests focus on online role-playing games, video games, and transmedia storytelling, using a mesocritical approach. He is the founder and editor of Éditions de l’Inframince.

Riccardo Fassone is an assistant professor at the University of Torino, Italy. His main areas of research are the history of video game production and the relations between cinema and video games. He is the author of two books, Every Game is an Island: Endings and Extremities in Video Games (Bloomsbury, 2017) and Cinema e videogiochi (Carocci, 2017), and several articles and book chapters.

Michael Fuchs is a fixed-term assistant professor in American Studies at the University of Graz in Austria. Including the present volume, he has co-edited six essay collections. In addition, he has (co-)authored over fifty published and forthcoming journal articles and book chapters on horror films, American television, video games, contemporary American literature, comics, and fan cultures. His first monograph, tentatively titled Horror in U.S. Cities: American Urban Spaces in Horror Cinema, is under contract with the University of Wales Press. For additional information on his research, see his website at <http://www.fuchsmichael.net>.

Jason I. Kolkey received his doctorate in English from Loyola University Chicago. His research focuses on Romantic-period literature, textual studies, and book history. He has published on the roles of copyright ideology and literary piracy in the emergence of British Romanticism in European Romantic Review and The Byron Journal. He lives in Chicago, working as a writer, editor, and independent scholar.

Armin Lippitz is a PhD candidate at the University of Klagenfurt in Austria. His dissertation discusses the inter- and transmedial exchange between comics and video games. Since 2014, he has been an adjunct lecturer in the Department of English at the University of Klagenfurt, where he teaches North American literatures, comics, and video games.

Laurent Milesi is Tenured Professor of English Literature and Critical Theory at Shanghai Jiao Tong University and Honorary Senior Research Fellow at Cardiff University. He has written extensively on Joyce and related aspects of modernism, twentieth-century (American) poetry, postmodernism, and poststructuralism, with a particular emphasis on both Jacques Derrida and Hélène Cixous, several of whose works he has also translated. His edited collection, James Joyce and the Difference of Language, was published by Cambridge University Press in 2003. He is one of the general editors for the Theory, Culture, and Politics book series at Rowman and Littlefield, for which he co-edited Credo Credit Crisis: Speculations on Faith and Money (2017), and co-editor in chief for the international journal Word and Text: A Journal of Literary Studies and Linguistics.

Hugo Montembeault is a PhD candidate and a lecturer in video game studies at Université de Montréal. He also works as a research assistant for the "Video Games Observation and Documentation University Lab" (<http://www.ludov.ca>). His main research examines how glitches transform gameplay and participate in a co-creative game design processes. His second area of interest reflects on the relationship between the player experience and the semiotic notions of focaliza(c)tion, self-reflexivity, and meta-referentiality. In collaboration with Maxime Deslongchamps-Gagnon, he runs a French academic podcast called Profil Ludique, which is dedicated to the in-depth analysis of the “walking simulator” genre. For more information, see: <https://soundcloud.com/profil-ludique>.

Andréane Morin-Simard is a PhD candidate and a lecturer in Video Game Studies at Université de Montréal. Her research focuses on the interaction between popular music and audiovisual media and the effects of intertextuality and interference on the cinematic, televisual, and video-gaming experience. She has been involved in various research projects on video game genres within the research team LUDOV (formerly Ludiciné) from Université de Montréal. She is on the editorial board of the online academic journal Kinephanos.

Sebastian Möring is an assistant professor in the European Media Studies program offered at the University of Potsdam and the University of Applied Sciences Potsdam, Germany. His research focuses on the aesthetics of computer games, the philosophy of computer games, and the interplay between computer games and other media. He acts as the coordinator of the DIGAREC (Digital Games Research Center of the University of Potsdam). Sebastian earned his doctoral degree from the Center for Computer Games Research at the IT University of Copenhagen. He is a member of the steering group of the Game Philosophy Network, which organizes annual international conferences. For more information, please visit <http://sebastianmoering.com>.

Bernard Perron is Full Professor of Film and Games Studies at Université de Montréal. He has written The World of Scary Video Games: A Study in Videoludic Horror (Bloomsbury, 2018) and Silent Hill: The Terror Engine (University of Michigan Press, 2012). In addition, he has edited Horror Video Games: Essays on the Fusion of Fear and Play (McFarland, 2009) and, among others, co-edited The Video Game Theory Reader (Routledge, 2003), The Routledge Companion to Video Games Studies (Routledge, 2014), and Video Games and the Mind: Essays on Cognition, Affect and Emotion (McFarland, 2016). His research and writings concentrate on video games, interactive cinema, the horror genre, and on narration, cognition, and the ludic dimension of narrative cinema. For additional information, please see <http://www.ludov.ca>.

Stephan Schwingeler is Professor for Media Studies at the University of Applied Sciences and Arts Hildesheim/Holzminden/Göttingen in Germany. He is the author of Die Raummaschine: Raum und Perspektive im Computerspiel (The Space Machine: Space and Perspective in Video Games; Verlag Werner Hülsbusch, 2008) and Kunstwerk Computerspiel: Digitale Spiele als künstlerisches Material (Video Games as Works of Art: Digital Games as Artistic Medium; transcript, 2014). In addition to his scholarly endeavors, Schwingeler has curated numerous international exhibitions, including "Global Games," "New Gameplay," "Games and Politics," and "Digital Games."

Tim Summers is Lecturer in Music at Royal Holloway, University of London. He researches music in popular culture, often focusing on video games. He is the author of Understanding Video Game Music (Cambridge University Press, 2016) and, on the same topic, he has edited an issue of The Soundtrack and a collection of essays, Ludomusicology: Approaches to Video Game Music (Equinox, 2016). He has written for journals including The Journal of the Royal Musical Association, Cambridge Opera Journal, Music and the Moving Image, and The Journal of Film Music. He is currently writing a second monograph and editing the Cambridge Companion to Video Game Music.

Carl Therrien is Associate Professor of Game and Film Studies at Université de Montréal. He has co-founded the first international conference on the history of games and the Game History Annual Symposium in Montreal. He has recently completed a manuscript on the PC Engine for the Platform Studies series published by MIT Press and the first phase of an ongoing research project on the history of video games. His research and writings concentrate on the topic of critical historiography of games. For more information, please see <http://www.ludov.ca>.

Mattia Thibault is a postdoctoral researcher at Tampere University of Technology (Marie Skłodowska Curie IF). He worked as research fellow at the University of Torino, where he earned his PhD in semiotics and media in the SEMKNOW program, the first pan-European doctoral program on semiotics. His research interests revolve around the semiotics of play and the cultural relevance of games. His current research focuses on establishing an interdisciplinary framework for urban gamification. He has presented and organized numerous talks, conferences, and activities dedicated to these topics and has published a number of peer-reviewed articles and (co-)edited several volumes, including Gamification urbana: lettura e riscritture ludiche degli spazi cittadini (Aracne, 2016) and a special issue of Lexia titled Virality, for an Epidemiology of Meaning.

Jeff Thoss is an independent scholar based in Berlin, Germany. He earned his PhD in transmedial narratology at the University of Graz, Austria, and has served as fixed-term assistant professor of English at Freie Universität Berlin. He has published journal articles and book chapters on topics related to narrative theory, intermediality and comics studies, as well as a monograph, When Storyworlds Collide: Metalepsis in Popular Fiction, Film and Comics (Brill-Rodopi, 2015).

Håvard Vibeto is an associate professor at the Inland Norway University of Applied Sciences. He has a background as a film scholar and is currently working in the Department of Game Development, where his research and teaching focuses on video games, game aesthetics, and the player experience.